Summary and reviews of Space, In Chains by Laura Kasischke

O elegant giant And Jehovah. And Alzheimer. And a diamond of extraordinary size on the hand of a starving child. The quiet mob in a vacant lot. My father asleep in a chair in a warm corridor. While his boat, the Unsinkable, sits at the bottom of the ocean. While his boat, the Unsinkable, waits marooned on the shore. While his boat, the Unsinkable, sails on, and sails on. Excerpted from Space ...

Space, in Chains by Laura Kasischke. reviewed by Ellen Davis. One of Mark Rothko's floating rectangles is a fitting cover image for Laura Kasischke's new book of poems, Space, in Chains. Just as his shapes are defined by formal qualities—line and color—so her poems are formally defined by syntax, line, and internal rhyme.

Space, in Chains - Harvard Review

Laura Kasischke is the poet of surreal catalogues. The title poem of the present volume—"Space, in Chains"—for just one example, begins with a catalogue that reads like a list of categories from the television game show Family Feud: Things that are beautiful, and die. Things that fall asleep in the afternoon, in sun.

Space, in Chains is an experiment in this apparent contradiction. At seventy-three poems and 110 pages, Kasischke's eighth book is her widest palette yet, a world in which "Consciousness, memory, sensory information, the / historians and their glorious war"—nearly anything that crosses the poet's mind—are "crammed into a thing the size of a tadpole's eye."
