The Soul Of Anime Collaborative

The concept of 'co-creation' used by management scholars and sociologists is close to the 'collaborative creativity' used by Ian Condry to describe emergent structures of creative action in which both anime studios and fans play an important role. Similarly, "platforms" are a hot topic in management studies.

Anime is not simply a media object, according to Condry, but a passionate collaboration between fans and producers. The Soul of Anime is the result of over 10 years of multi-sited ethnography conducted in Japan and the US (page 14). Condry explicitly challenges other methods, including literary criticism, for being too constrained by their focus on content alone.
